The newspaper headline exclaimed "Elvis Presley Is Dead" Well he is not dead. He just the building. After his last concert in Indianapolis, Indiana, he wanted to spend some time out of the lime light. After all, to him it was like his entire life on on stage 24-7.

Chapter 2 by Grasshopper

Priscilla didn't realize it at the time but she was actually the brainchild of the idea. "Returnnnnn to sender Bon Bon Bon Bon Ad dress un known". "MY GOD ELVIS YOU'RE KILLING ME OUT HERE!!!! Turn the fan on or something! It smells horrible!!" "You're not the only one dying here baba." He replied. He started pondering his words... Dying Here???? He finished his business and with jazz hands he proclaimed "It's Jelly Time!!!" For a while he sat there writing a Dear Priscilla letter on some toilet paper, then left it on the closed seat.

Elvis strutted his way out of the bathroom, put on some Bermuda shorts, Hawaiian shirt, long white socks pulled up to his knees, shiny black dress shoes, thick sun screen on his nose, an instamatic string around his neck, a big floppy hat, and sunglasses so thick that his mother wouldn't even know his name. "I'm taking a little break, that?" "Ahhh... I'm going to the store to get aaaaaa box of Jelly Donuts" he called. "But Elvis it's two o'clock at night" she questioned. "I'lll be taking a little break, that?"
